

A checklist of the testimonia and fragments of Didymus

Thomas R. P. Coward and Enrico Emanuele Prodi

This Checklist aims to collect the testimonia to Didymus' life and references to all extant fragments of his works. It is not, and could not have been, a proper edition to supersede the one published by Moritz Schmidt in 1854; the latter endeavour we leave to guts more brazen than ours. But we believe that a Checklist of fragments, organised by works, will be a useful instrument for those working on Didymus in the interim. Scholars will be able to have as complete an overview as possible of the evidence for Didymus' output and to cite any fragment of it in a simple and unambiguous way.

We have only included those fragments which are explicitly attributed to Didymus by an ancient source, though we have sought to remark when other sources preserve the same information without attribution. While this meant leaving out much that is probably or certainly Didymean (one need only think of Didymus' quarter of the Iliadic VMK, or the doxographies in the Pindar scholia), we believe that securely attributed material is a safer starting point for the interpretative and comparative work that will turn up more. We have, however, included two fragments where the source does not cite Didymus by name, but does cite a title which is attested among his works; in these cases, the number is prefaced by an asterisk as a mark of uncertainty (*38, *49). When the source cites both Didymus and the title of the work, the number is prefaced by a circlet (°1, °2, °3, etc.).

Given our policy of only including named fragments, we have excluded several papyri which have been connected to Didymus at one point or another, with varying degrees of plausibility but without conclusive proof. We offer a list here, with no pretence of exhaustiveness. The miscellany P.Oxy. XIII 1611, with its wealth of quotations and its overlaps with the Aristophanes scholia and Marcellinus' Life of Thucydides, seems a promising candidate for the Symmikta. P.Oxy. XV 1801 recto (CLGP I.1.4 Aristophanes 3) preserves a lexicon of comic words with a great deal of parallels in Hesychius; it could be Didymus' Λέξις κωμική, or Theon's, or another's. Several hypomnemata to Aristophanes have been linked to Didymus or regarded as excerpts from his work: P.Oxy. VI 856, XXXV 2737, P.Flor. II 112 (CLGP I.1.4 Aristophanes 1, 27, 28; two marginal annotations on this last papyrus mention Didymus explicitly, see 276, 277). The same goes for two Pindaric commentaries, P.Berol. inv. 13875 and PSI XIV 1391 recto, and the hypomnema to Bacchylides' Dithyrambs, P.Oxy. XXIII 2368 (CLGP I.1.4 Bacchylides 4). Didymean authorship has also been suggested for P.Oxy. XXXV 2744, which appears to be a commentary to an unknown text. Two mutilated titles mention someone who can be supplemented as Didymus: P.Berol. inv. 11903 = BKT X 20 (the book was entitled]τεχνος, unattested among our Didymus' works) and P.Oxy. inv. 51 B 44/G(b) (a commentary to Aristophanes – but other supplements are possible for the author's name).¹ A Didymus and his πρόγραμμα or πρόγραμμα are mentioned in P.Lond. inv. 2110 recto (SB XX 14599) in connection with the copying of books;² there is no way of telling whether this was our man or one of the many other writers who shared his name.

In many cases our attribution of a fragment to a specific work is conjectural. We believe that an educated guess based on content, when possible, is preferable to lumping large numbers of fragments together among those incerti operis. Too little is known about the Περὶ παθῶν, however, for the many etymological fragments transmitted by the Byzantine Etymologica to be attributed to that work by editorial fiat: attractive though that course was, they have been relegated to the incerti operis instead. Often a degree of ambiguity remains, especially when a given interpretation could have occurred both in a commentary to a text and in a lexicographical work. The ambiguity is compounded by the fact that Didymus must have reused material across different works on the same topic, and therefore some things must have been found both in a lexicon and in the commentary to the relevant text, or in works of other kinds (see for instance the triplet formed by 221, °281 col. xi.63ff., and 355). Altogether we make no claim to inerrancy in this matter, even more than in others.

Most of the titles in our checklist are attested by the ancient sources, but we have accepted a few which can reasonably be hypothesised even without direct attestation (e.g. X, XI, XV). We have discarded some of Schmidt's less felicitous inventions, such as the Metamorphoses and On Geography. Likewise, the Polemical Explanations against Juba have been returned to their transmitted, and more satisfactory, title (XVIII). We have retained On the Different Meanings of Words (Περὶ διαφορᾶς λέξεως) as a separate work from On the Wrong Use of Words (Περὶ διεφθορίας λεξεως). We share Schmidt's – and others' – suspicion that the titles Συμποτικά and Σύμμικτα may refer to one and the same work, but in the absence of positive evidence to contradict the transmitted titles, we keep them separate (XXXVII, XXXVIII). We accept the Suda's testimony on the existence of 'Didymus the Younger' (δ 873 Adler) and his authorship of Πιθανά and Περὶ ὀρθογραφίας; we have consequently excluded those two works from our count, and all the Didymean fragments which Schmidt assigned to the Περὶ ὀρθογραφίας are now incerti operis. We have also attributed to the younger Didymus, and therefore kept off our list, the Hippocratic lexicon mentioned by Erotian in his preface (p. 5 Nachmanson), since the younger Didymus – unlike his elder namesake – is independently credited with a fragment on a medical topic (Et.Gud. s.v. ἀρτηρία, I p. 208 add. De Stefani).³ Likewise we accept the Suda's attribution of On Analogy among the Romans to Didymus Claudius (δ 874 Adler), and the resulting absence of Roman interests among Didymus' genuine fragments speaks against his authorship of the polemic against Cicero's De re publica (Suda τ 895 Adler), pace Amm. Marc. 22.16.16.

The Checklist broadly follows the organising principles of Schmidt's table of contents and Braswell's critical catalogue of Didymus' works.⁴ Lexicographical works come first (I–VI, °1–*49), then commentaries to individual authors and related works (VII–XXXIII, 50– 325), grammatical treatises (now reduced to XXXIV, °328), and works of antiquarian interest (XXXV–XLI, 329–°361); fragmenta incerti operis (362–402) and the list of dubia and spuria (403–405, 406–414) conclude the Checklist. Titles of works are given Roman numerals, while we use Arabic numerals for fragments. Unlike Schmidt with his idiosyncratic reference system, we number all the fragments continuously throughout the Checklist. When a fragment is preserved by two or more sources naming Didymus, we number them as 1a, 1b, etc.; further sources transmitting the same material without attribution are listed after the relevant entry, introduced by ‘cf.’. For reference purposes the Checklist can be cited with the respective testimonium or fragment number followed by C.-Pr., e.g. Didym. Lex. Com. F36 C.-Pr. or Didym. V 36 C.-Pr., or Didym. T11 C.-Pr.
