Creator: Jaroslav Černý

Czech Egyptologist. Born, Plzeň 1898. Died, Oxford 1970.

Son of Antonín Černý (1861-?) and Anna Černá, née Navrátilová (1866-?). Attended elementary school (1904-1909) and state grammar school (gymnasium) in Plzeň (1909-1917). Studied at Charles University, Prague (1917-1922), doctoral degree awarded 1922. Employed as a clerk in the Živnobanka central branch in Prague (1919-1927).

Associated with the IFAO from 1925 as visiting scholar, later member of expedition to Deir el-Medina. Awarded scholarship to study hieratic ostraca in the Egyptian Museum, Cairo. Sponsored by T. G. Masaryk, P. Petschek and Orientální ústav, Prague. Secretary of the Orientální ústav from 1929. Worked with Sir A. Gardiner on ostraca from different European collections as well as on hieratic papyri. Formal contract with Gardiner from 1934. Lecturer in Egyptology, Charles University, Prague, 1929-46. Worked at Sinai in the 1930s, resulting in his new edition of Gardiner and Peet, The Inscriptions of Sinai. Excavated at Deir el-Medina, 1925-1970. Worked as epigrapher in Abydos with A. Calverley and M. Broome.

Affiliated to the Czechoslovak legation in Cairo from 1942, in diplomatic service of the Czechoslovak government-in-exile (London) until 1945.

Appointed Edwards Professor of Egyptology, University College London, 1946-51. Professor of Egyptology, Oxford, 1951-65 (Emeritus, 1965-70). Worked in Nubia recording temple inscriptions at Amada, Gebel el-Shems, and Abû Simbel during the UNESCO campaign.

Initiated and co-organised topographical and epigraphic mapping on the Theban mountain as part of the UNESCO and CEDAE campaign. Published extensively in the field of Egyptology including publications on palaeography, Ramesside period, social history, religion, and late New Kingdom hieratic inscriptions.

Married Marie Sargant née Hloušková (1899-1991), philologist, teacher, activist.

Subseries characteristics, Černý Mss. 21

Notes on the fonds accumulation

The Černý's correspondence (series Černý Mss. 21) is a part of the Černý collection (containing altogether 50 series), bequeathed to the Griffith Institute explicitly in his will (Černý Mss. 19.71). A major part of the collection was included in the Griffith Institute Archive after Černý's demise in 1970, several clusters of documents were added subsequently, mainly in 2011 and 2016.

The correspondence contains letters to J. Černý as well as select drafts and carbon copies of his replies. The Sargent - Černý subseries contains letters that Černý and his wife exchanged since the 1940s.

The series has several salient characteristics that reflect the accumulation of the correspondence:

- Only relatively few letters from the pre-WW II period have been included in this collection (fonds); it seems likely that J. Černý took only a selection of his papers with him to England when leaving Prague in 1946 and he lost access to some of his possessions in Prague after February 1948. Černý did acknowledge the loss of part of his correspondence, for instance when writing to M. Matthieu, the widow of I. M. Lourie (Černý Mss.21.1380) in 1959 and referring to photographs from Lourie that 'are among my correspondence which (sic) is no longer accessible to me'. It is not known if he regained any of his possessions during his visit to Prague in spring 1967 and it would appear that if he did, the correspondence was not included.

- The pattern of losses is well visible in the letter subseries sent from and to Maria Sargant (Černá). Letters sent to Černý, whilst he was visiting Prague up until early 1948, are lost, whereas his letters to M. Sargant, which she kept in London, attest that the contact was mutual and regular throughout that time period (shown in the Černý Mss. 21.270-21.378).
- It is probable there was preceding correspondence especially with B. Bruyère, J. Capart and Ch. Desroches-Noblecourt, as well as Nagel, Sainte Fare-Garnot, and other French Egyptologists. It is certain there was previous correspondence with A. H. Gardiner, as the Gardiner collection contains letters from Černý dated since the 1920s, similarly with B. Gunn, whose papers contain Černý letters from the 1930s.
- In addition, some letters from his pupil Z. Žába were given back to Žába after Černý's demise and are at present located in the possession of the Czech Institute of Egyptology.
- Černý's professional and social contacts would have probably widened after 1946, due to his position as the Edwards Professor at the University College, London, and then Professor of Egyptology at Oxford, hence the body of post WW II correspondence may be expected to be more substantial. However, it is possible that a part of his previous correspondence is lost or still with family members in the present Czech Republic. It is also possible that some letters were destroyed either by him or by his family members in Czechoslovakia as they might have been perceived as incriminating communications of an émigré.
- There are also gaps in some subseries around late 1950/early 1951. This might have been due to Černý's prolonged illness at this time – work-related correspondence lapsed and personal correspondence might have been either limited or subsequently destroyed. His main correspondents at that time were Maria Sargant, I. E. S. Edwards and Alan H. Gardiner.
- Other seeming hiatus might have been caused by change in communication patterns, e.g. when a correspondent moved to the same city or preferred to use telephone, or moved again to a different location (a case in point being R. O. Faulkner, but also A. H. Gardiner).
- Some instances of a correspondence hiatus may have still another explanation, e.g. letters from G. Posener from 1955 and 1956 that seem to be missing. The hiatus coincides with difficult political situation in Egypt preceding and following the Suez crisis in 1956, but any explanation of the missing correspondence remains speculative at present.
- Further, when in Egypt, especially in the 1950s and 1960s, Černý on occasion noted to his correspondents that he was out of reach (compare e.g. 21.671, hence only limited numbers of letters were sent to him whilst travelling to and in Egypt in this period of time). This was, however, not an absolute rule, since he exchanged materials with colleagues interested in texts he was working on while in the field or sites he visited (notably in correspondence with H. W. Fairman or R. Moss).
- With his move to Oxford, regular Oxford correspondents mostly sent letters only when Černý himself was travelling outside Oxford (a salient example is R. Moss, Černý Mss. 21.1417-21.1453).

Assessment of the correspondence series

General observations:

- The correspondence of Egyptologists is as unique and rich a resource for a study of 'scholarly social machine' and cultures of knowledge as are other, better-known corpora of scholarly letters.¹ As such, it proffers also a solid material for history of an intellectual development of

Oriental studies, avoiding the occasional pitfalls of schematic interpretations based on selective choice of sources.

- If "correspondence was the information superhighway of the early modern world"² (i.e. until the eighteenth century), it retained much of its importance for the nineteenth to twentieth century history of scholarship,³ offering valuable insights into intellectual and social formation of scholars, in our case, Egyptologists. Productive correspondents and networkers, such as Černý, Gardiner or Newberry, whose papers are kept in the Griffith Institute Archive, are a prime case in point, ripe for presentation to the Egyptological and wider public.

Specific observations:

- The correspondence is concerned with both professional and private matters.
- For a biographical research the letters provide essential information on chronology of events in Černý's life.
- Regarding Egyptology, particular sites, monuments and research problems are often discussed and directly relevant for an evaluation of Egyptological research of the period. Often discussions preceded a known publication and hence enable observations on research practices within the subject.
 - Development of individual approaches to texts and their translations may also be observed.
 - There is a specialist record of monuments and their study and often information on history of a particular excavation may be also obtained if combining visual and textual material from the Černý bequest and from other Egyptological archives⁴ – i.e. letters, and photographs also contained in the bequest. Changing archaeological landscape of individual archaeological sites may be observed on photographs, whilst correspondence may add details on research plans and intentions.
- Institutional practices, as well as research and academic policies may be followed in the letters, including assessment of other academics, examinations and advice on academic careers.
- Accumulation of academic and private libraries is observable throughout the correspondence as J. Černý exchanged off-prints and publications and mediated purchases of books to a number of his colleagues, notably Edel, Fairman, Lexa, Žába, and many others.
- Aspects of an academic and personal habitus of Černý and his correspondents are well illustrated in some letters, including cultivation of social capital, norms of politeness in correspondence and different interpersonal relationships.
- Černý's approach to circulation and dissemination of Egyptological information may also be observed – he kept a large network, promoted constant contact, book exchanges, etc., and with his support both for Topographical Bibliography and the AEB demonstrated an understanding for the emerging research infrastructures in Egyptology.
 - Academic networks ('Invisible college'), including research information and social contacts may be consequently mapped.

- Context of political, economic and social circumstances is shown in a number of letters, reflecting on coeval situation, this concerns e.g. World War II, the Suez Crisis, changes in the management of Egyptian antiquities, the UNESCO campaign in Nubia, Cold War⁵ and others.
- A group of letters to and from German academics immediately after the Second World War offers some insight into the situation of post-war German academe, as well as attests to an unusual generosity of Černý.
- Personal matters include family and other personal relationships of the correspondents, also personal crises of J. Černý in 1942 and 1950/1951.

The letters are relevant for Egyptologists, as well as historians of post-war Britain and Europe, historians of science, and experts in Oriental studies.

Further interpretation notes

- An introduction to the complex heritage of Černý's letters was included in Růžová, Jiřina 2010. Písař Místa pravdy: Život egyptologa Jaroslava Černého. Praha: Filozofická fakulta Univerzity Karlovy, highlighting the potential for further research. The present detailed examination, as outlined also in the assessment above, has identified a number of issues both inside and outside of the discipline.
- The letters demonstrate different levels and densities of relationships, and lend themselves well to a social network analysis including network changes over time and geographical locations, research topics, etc.
- The resulting data could be tied-in usefully with ongoing research into history of Egyptology understood in a contextualized approach and preferably not subject to one interpretive model. History of Egyptology is building a set of research paradigms, influenced on the one hand by national histories and biographical research, and on the other by larger phenomena, such as colonial and post-colonial studies. A balanced approach that would integrate an awareness of Egyptological research paradigms, intellectual history, as well as of individual biographies and wider elements of social and cultural history, is desirable, and offering resources such as Egyptological correspondence will help in promoting it.
- Comparanda in ongoing studies in the history of the subject see Raue, Deitrich and Susanne Voss, 2016. Georg Steindorff und die deutsche Ägyptologie im 20. Jahrhundert, Berlin: De Gruyter, see also Steindorff project statement <https://arachne.dainst.org/project/steindorff>, also Gertzen, Thomas L. 2013. École de Berlin und "Goldenes Zeitalter" (1882-1914) der Ägyptologie als Wissenschaft: das Lehrer-Schüler-Verhältnis von Ebers, Erman und Sethe. Emery. Bulletin of the History of Archaeology, 26(1): 9, pp. 1–15, DOI: <http://dx.doi.org/10.5334/bha-591>; compare Carruthers, William (ed.) 2015. Histories of Egyptology: interdisciplinary measures. Routledge Studies in Egyptology 2. New York; London: Routledge., cf. also Carruthers, William 2010. Means to an end: seeking Bryan Emery in archives. Egyptian Archaeology 36, 8-9).
- They also demonstrate that Egyptology in Černý's time was not tied to, as it has been put forward⁶, circular thinking and bounded concepts, but was in fact trying to solve fundamental questions of linguistic, archaeological and historical research, necessary to be addressed in order to establish sound methodologies and practices of verifiable (or falsifiable) research. It was a complex of emerging and developing paradigms of a discipline that was still making its building blocks in the period of the 1930s to 1970s – grammars, archaeological and epigraphy methods, as well as emerging research infrastructures such as the AEB or the Topographical Bibliography.

Presentation notes

- The correspondence would be best presented digitised, transcribed and provided with ISAD/ISAAR metadata. The presentation could well be undertaken in AToM, following the Newberry model (provided more visual objects could be included as AToM develops), achieving a result with more contextual data and metadata as opposed to e.g. presentations of archive materials in projects such as ARACHNE - <http://arachne.uni-koeln.de/drupal/?q=en/node/3>. ARACHNE has targets not unrelated to the situation in the Griffith Archive, but they opted for Drupal as their mainstay. This allowed them to integrate data of different sorts, but the archive descriptions, for instance, do not show an ISAD structure.
- Still using AToM, one could also build a platform similar to Cultures of Knowledge, <https://www.history.ox.ac.uk/cultures-knowledge>, with added value of archaeological and philological information directly linked via TopBib and OEB references (URIs). Compare also – the Social Network and Archival Context project, <http://socialarchive.iath.virginia.edu/>.
- A standard hardcopy edition (with English translations for texts in less commonly known languages) and with an introduction and appropriate commentaries would of course be a desideratum if ever an edition series of 'Sources for the History of Egyptology', or something to that effect, is contemplated. This is, however, a speculative step.

Individual subseries remarks:

Černý Mss.21.105 is a letter from A. Lucas to P. E. Newberry, August 20, 1935.
