EDITORIAL PRACTICE

MUSICAL EXAMPLES

Musical examples are taken from a single source; where this is from a secondary source, that source is given in short title (full details can be found in the bibliography). Editorial practice for the examples taken from primary sources is the same as that for the transcriptions (see below), except that ♩ is used throughout in duple-time examples. Where a secondary source has altered note-values, these have been returned to the original in order to harmonise with the examples taken from primary sources. Occasionally examples break off and continue a little later in the piece - this is indicated by a zig-zag line. The original clefs are given in prefatory staves, since this is often relevant, but other details are not given in these staves.

TRANSCRIPTIONS

The original note-values, mensuration signs and key-signatures have been retained. Clefs and barring are editorial, with the original clefs being indicated in a prefatory stave. Final notes have been equalised without comment. All accidentals appearing in the original sources are given on the stave. Editorial accidentals are of two kinds: those of a cautionary or consequential nature (e. g. repeated notes broken by a bar-line) are also placed on the stave, but in brackets; those suggested for reasons of musica ficta, or because they appear in the other choir, are placed above the stave. These latter are kept to minimum. Accidentals on the stave - both original and bracketed - are regarded as remaining in force for the duration of the bar; those above the stave apply only to the note in question. Flats and sharps have been replaced by naturals where appropriate to modern practice; this applies also to the basso continuo, where only accidentals and figures in the source are given. In concertato pieces the rubrics in the basso continuo concerning the forces in use in any particular section are reproduced.

Spelling of texts and capitalisation have been adjusted according to modern usage. Where the repeat sign (<ij>) is used in the major source (that listed first), the words are underlined in the transcription. Differences in the use or non-use of the (<ij>) sign between sources are not commented on, but significant changes in underlay between sources are.

CRITICAL COMMENTARY

All pieces are 8v unless otherwise stated. Only sources used in preparing the transcriptions are listed here. All primary and some secondary sources have been consulted; all sources are listed in Appendix V. Abbreviations for printed and manuscript sources are as in Appendices IV and V. Names of notes are capitalized.
